Welcome to the network for scientific research and risk assessment with the Copenhagen Psychosocial Questionnaire (COPSOQ).

International studies show that exposures to psychosocial risks are important characteristics of work. There is clear evidence that aspects and levels of job strain vary between countries, branches and professions. COPSOQ is a well proven instrument to gather valid and reliable information about main risk factors.

The setting, implementation and evaluation of preventive actions at workplace level and also preventive policies in general need systematic collection, recording, analysis and dissemination of key information on the exposures of workers to psychosocial factors. This is a major challenge due to the diversity of labour in our days and the scientific and technical requirements to generate useful information.

The Copenhagen Psychosocial Questionnaire (COPSOQ) represents a comprehensive achievement, because it is not linked to a singular theory of work strain. Developed in 2000 by T.S. Kristensen and V. Borg it has received an important international recognition and dissemination
